

Looking for some answers, but don't know where to turn?

Do you wish someone was there to show you the ropes or be a sounding board when you need it?

Are you interested in expanding personal development and professional networking opportunities for yourself or your staff?

Or are you looking for a way to deepen your commitment to the community media field, but don't know who needs your help?

The Alliance for Community Media supports community media practitioners at all levels across the United States. As a network of local media leaders, producers, technicians and educators, we want to grow and strengthen those in our network for the future of the field. That is why we're introducing the ACM Mentor Network.

THE IDEA IS SIMPLE: The ACM has connections with community media practitioners throughout the United States, some with decades of valuable experience. We also see new people entering the field every year with all levels of experience. To grow better leaders and innovators, we want to spark and strengthen connections through the mentoring experience.

HOW TO PARTICIPATE:

- Commit to one monthly one-hour phone call or in-person meeting over the course of one year
- Mentors field any question from their mentees in a confidential setting, with the promise to listen, relate their experiences, and share perspectives on how to solve problems, lead projects, or just deal with work life balance

NO JUDGMENTS, JUST SUPPORT.

The program helps our member organizations deepen the training and development of their staff and accelerates their growth as leaders and learners. It also helps seasoned community media practitioners pass on important experience for the future of the field.

Will you be a part of this important growing network?
